Ryan Lundquist is an associate at Russ August & Kabat, focusing his practice on high technology patent and intellectual property litigation.

Prior to joining Russ August & Kabat, Ryan worked as a government contracts, business disputes, and construction litigator, garnering experience practicing in state and federal courts across the United States from Washington, D.C. to Seattle, Washington. The subject matter of his work ranged from insurance coverage issues to commercial lease disputes and from construction issues to high dollar value, high technology government contract bids and protests.

Ryan earned his law degree from Washington University in St. Louis School of Law graduating cum laude. While at WashU, Ryan served as Symposium Editor for the Washington University Law Review. Prior to his legal career, Ryan was an instructor of Latin and Finance at St. Luke's School in New Canaan, Connecticut, where he was also a coach of the football, basketball, baseball, and softball teams.
